GEORGE BROWN
2012

George was born in Kansas and moved with his family to Louisville when he was five years old. He graduated from Louisville High School in 1951. After graduation, he went to work for Joe Colacci at Phillips 66 while attending the University of Colorado. He completed his degree in business management and was employed by the Public Service Company in Boulder and worked there until he retired in 1994.

George was a leader who made a significant impact on the Louisville community through his extensive service in both the private and public sectors. George served Louisville as a member of the Planning Commission and the City Council. He was active in the Louisville Lions Club where he served as President, and was also a member of the Volunteer Fire Department serving as Chief. He was a life member of the Louisville Rod & Gun Club and Tri-City Elks.

George is a modest man who likes to give credit to others that worked with him in the many organizations involved in the betterment of Louisville, but it's clear that he was a natural born leader and the City of Louisville benefitted in countless ways from his hard work and leadership.
